When the invitation came to me to deliver one of the addresses on this memorable occasion, I, with the sensitiveness natural to men of my years, was tempted to think, from the subject assigned to me, that the committee perhaps imagined me a contemporary of the fathers of this institution, and hence able to speak from personal knowledge of its early days. The committee would not have been far wrong, if this had been their impression. It so happens that I spent a portion of every year from 1850 to 1859, in the kindly hospitality of the old Alexander house, and like most early impressions, the recollections of that time are most vivid. Dr. Archibald Alexander died in October, 1851, and I do not recall him. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
